D2-/- mice is equipped with incisors which are used for grooming. How would this affect grooming behavior? The article does not cite relevant references. We have read this submission. We believe that we have an appropriate level of expertise to confirm that it is of an acceptable scientific standard. 10.5256/f1000research.8469.r11457 Referee response for version 1 Ishida Takao 1 Referee Division of Anatomy and Neurobiology, Graduate School of Medical and Dental Sciences, Kagoshima University, Kagoshima, Japan Competing interests:No competing interests were disclosed. 23 8 2014 Version 1 The authors have provided the references. The study is novel and interesting in view of the relation between acetylcholine synthesis and defecation behavior. Unfortunately, the manuscript is not well written. The section of association of defecation with acetylcholine synthesis in the article should be improved. In this manuscript, the sentence "We showed in the subsequent experiment that fecal pellets of (genotype of) -/- mice were of uniform size and were relatively larger in number than those of +/- mice" was repeated and should be corrected to "The fecal pellets of -/- mice were of uniform size and were relatively larger in number than those of +/- mice". In addition, the authors must pay attention to the grammatical problem in the discussion section. I have read this submission. I believe that I have an appropriate level of expertise to confirm that it is of an acceptable scientific standard. [^1]: HG and FT designed the experiments and wrote the paper. JS, NW, MM, and TS performed the experiments. [^2]: Competing interests:No competing interests were disclosed. In inkjet printing, a print head typically comprises a print head reservoir from which ink is ejected from nozzles. If the ink is not properly cooled, the ink may coagulate (i.e., freeze) and form solid deposits on the print head that obstruct the nozzles and may ultimately fail the print head. Typically, the print head is cooled using a motor-driven fan that is mounted on the print head and blows air past the nozzles. This is an 82157476af
